FRENCH LETTER

PARIS, Feb. 19.—The beggar's quarter, where cripples are made to order, has come to life again.

It was called the "court of miracles" for 600 years, when it held forth in a quarter mile area in the heart of Paris. The police scoured the place clear time after time, but the final blow was the cutting of new streets and the building of new buildings a generation ago. That operation left in sunlight and air which drove off the professional beggars.

Across the River from the Old Cathedral of Notre Dame, a modern court of miracles, still on a small order, is in being. The court comes out apparently minus a leg, walking sad-faced and weak, on two rented crutches. The blind, the halt and the lame emerge in rented rags with forced police permits and sometimes with borrowed babies, thin, wan infants, to excite pity.

Begging is well regulated in Paris, but on holidays and to a lesser extent on Sundays, the police are purposely blind. However, the begging usually is done professionally in the guise of selling something that no one wants, postal cards, faded violet pencils and even the family dog, who promptly runs away from the kind-hearted purchaser.

Profiteering grocers are being punished in a new way by the Paris Police who forbid them to make their usual sidewalk display of goods for varying periods.

Excessive profits on staples, running up to 70 per cent, have been proved in many cases by a special cost-of-living commission which the Prefect of Police learned afterwards that the man over which the Prefect of Police himself resides. When sentence offenders to withdraw their wares from the sidewalk, the woman proved herself "ungrateful" by killing her benefactors will know why you have factor—and betrayer.

no display and they will know they will do well not to patronize you."

A "church dress" is the smiling, profitable answer of the fashion shop to the pope's edict against gowns too short at both ends.

It means one more change a week and one more dress in the wardrobe, and all is well in the best of worlds.

The increasingly strict enforcement of the vatican's order that women in "unseemly" dress shall be barred from the church and not be given communion caused uneasiness in the style world at first. The gown designed for Sunday services solves the problem because it will have a style of its own, not necessarily fluctuating with or following dress-makers' whims.

The present furry, like nearly all else, is not new. In ages past there have been similar campaigns and one credit scholar has dug out of an old tomi the epigram: "Man is fire, woman is tow, and the devil blows on them."

Low cut necks caused the trouble in the old days, but that was easily remedied with a piece of lace. Modernism, however, complicated things when it took to shortening gowns at both ends, chopped off the sleeves and dictated that underwear—if any—should be of the slightest.

Ingratitudo still stands in French law as adequate reason for a court to annul a will.

Malame Du De Talhouet, acquitted of a murder of a millionaire Greek, M. Basilionidis, with whom she lived for years, shot him because of neglect. She learned afterwards that the man who cast her off had left her his fortune. The will was clear but the court invalidated it because the woman proved herself "ungrateful" by killing her benefactors—and betrayer.

INTERIOR TRAPPER HAS FEET FROZEN

Daniel B. Libby, who has been trapping in the Koba district during the winter with his wife and son, fell into an overflow recently, while some distance from camp, and frosted his feet before he could reach shelter. A dog team was sent from Nenana by the marshal's office to the aid of Libby and he was taken to the hospital in Fairbanks, where it was ascertained that he had not suffered serious injury. It is believed that he will recover in about two weeks.

The Libbys, it was disclosed, had established a camp about seven miles from Koba station and were trapping. It had been their intention to work over to Lake Hinchumina by slow stages and after trapping there in the late spring to float down the Kantishna river with the Kuskokwim country as their ultimate object.

While adjusting a trap on a small stream about two miles from camp, Libby fell into an overflow and was immersed to the armpits. He started at once for the camp thinking that he could get there before he was frozen. However, it was found on his arrival that both feet were frozen.

When the dog team sent by the marshal's office reached their camp some time after the accident, Libby was able to be about after several days of enforced rest.

Libby is a pioneer of the Nome and Iditarod and a Fairbanks camps. His father was the first mar on record to discover gold in Alaska, during the days of the Russian occupation.
